this book presents the first large overview of late soviet religiosity across several confessions and soviet republics from the 1960s to the 1980s based on a broad range of new sources on the daily life of religious communities including material from regional archives and oral history it shows that religion not only survived soviet anti religious repression but also adapted to new conditions going beyond traditional views about a mere returned of the repressed the book shows how new forms of religiosity and religious socialisation emerged as new generations born into atheist families turned to religion in search of new meaning long before perestroika facilitated this process in addition the book examines anew religious activism and transnational networks between soviet believers and western organisations during the cold war explores the religious dimension of soviet female activism and shifts the focus away from the non religious human rights movement and from religious institutions to ordinary believers this book first published in 1984 examines the whole range of new religious movements which appeared in the 1960s and 1970s in the west it develops a wide ranging theory of these new religions which explains many of their major characteristics some of the movements are well known such as scientology krishna consciousness and the unification church others such as the process meher baba and 3 ho are much less known while some became international others remained local in other ways too such as style belief organisation they exhibit enormous diversity the movements studied here are classified under three ideal types world rejecting world affirming and world accommodating and from here the author develops a theory of the origins recruitment base characteristics and development patterns which they display the book offers a critical exploration of the theories of the new religions and analyses the highly contentious issue of whether they reflect the process of secularisation or whether they are a countervailing trend marking the resurgence of religion in the west
